Elements offers a few simple versions of many complex Photoshop features. For example, you can lower or raise contrast, copy or paste pictures, adjust color, add frame and overlay layers, and more. Editor's Note: Upgrading from Elements 12 is free, but the current version is no longer receiving updates from Adobe. Before you begin You can only edit images in the 32-bit version of Adobe Photoshop Elements 12. It doesn't support editing of 16-bit or 4-bit images. Before you begin, keep in mind that Photoshop Elements is not a replacement for Photoshop. It's more of a standalone app for simple edits. Another major difference: Elements is designed to run on all Windows computers. It will load on Windows 7, 8, or 10. With the free upgrade version, however, only Windows 10 is supported. In addition to Photoshop Elements, you can use Adobe Photoshop Lightroom to manage your photos. It's similar to the free Lightroom Classic, which remains in development. Downloading and installation To download Photoshop Elements (32-bit) from Adobe's website, choose "Adobe Photoshop Elements 12 (32-bit)," then "Media and Devices," then "Get it now" at the bottom of the page. (Alternatively, download the 11.3 MB download directly from the company's website.) After downloading the program, you'll be prompted to install the program. Click "yes" to begin the installation process, and allow the program to install its components. After the installation completes, Photoshop Elements will be ready to use. Getting started You can use Photoshop Elements to edit photos, add filters, modify effects, or make web graphics. For editing photos, you can choose from several options. Grandmother convicted after drowning grandson in bath A Grandmother who drowned her grandson in a bath is facing a life sentence after being convicted of murder. Kayleigh Jent, who had three children herself, admitted to drowning her son Zachary Currie in a bath back in 2009. During her trial last year the 44-year-old, of Stonefen Street, South Normanton, West Yorkshire, told jurors: "I'm very sorry for what I've done. I tried to keep him alive but I couldn't. I understand now that I didn't know what I was doing." Giving evidence in Bradford Crown Court, the woman was convicted of murder and a sentence of life in prison was handed out. Prosecutor Keith Christie said she had made "pregnant noises" but Zachary was not listening to her pleas. Mr Christie said that when she went to check on him she found "a mummified figure slumped in the bath". Mrs Jent, who was unemployed, told a jury last year: "I couldn't stop crying afterwards. I'd never cried so much in my life. I was scared that I would go to jail for life. "I really did love him, he was my only child. I had so much to live for." Zachary's death was ruled as misadventure – which means that the defendant knew her actions were likely to cause his death but did not know they were certain to do so – but Mrs Jent pleaded guilty to murder after her "bystander" defence was rejected. Mr Christie said Mrs Jent had agreed to meet Zachary at the family home on the night he died – which was on September 5, 2009 – and walk him to the North West Middlesbrough swimming baths. The court heard that Zachary called his mum on his mobile phone when they reached a flat on Cobb Avenue, Langsett. The prosecutor said: "Zachary said something to his mum about a man coming in the house and then the phone went dead. "Later that night Kayleigh called her sister-in-law and told her not to come home as there was a man in the house and that she was going to ring the police. "Kayleigh became distressed and didn�
